

Victoria Donner insists a kindred spirit is watching and guiding her. Not only that, according to Victoria, his presence and ghostly hand are the reason behind her new found artistic ability. Out of nowhere, she draws abstract images. She truly believes they are his messages from the other side. A puzzle of sorts, she needs to solve. Her costly and relentless visits to psychics breed nothing. In fact, the charcoal drawings are her label of insanity until the day Victoria disappears from the face of the earth. Unaware of her ability, Victoria inadvertently, through the creation of paranormal art, opens the door that takes her from the present back to 1943 where she comes face-to-face with the spirit that haunts her. His earthly persona is far from what she imagined and to make matters worse, he hasn't a clue who she is. Completely out of her element, Victoria is trapped in 1943 until she finds the resolution that brings her home. If that is even possible.
